THE COMMENTARIES OF FORTNUM & MASON

by H. Stuart Menzies

Illustrated by W. M. Hendy

IT has long been felt that the well-known Commentaries issued periodically by Messrs. Fortnum & Mason from their house in Piccadilly should be preserved in a more permanent form. The earlier numbers have acquired a considerable scarcity value, and only a few provident connoisseurs can show a complete set in the original state. A representative selection is now published in book form, produced with the distinction of format which the contents deserve.

Those who know the Commentaries will need no encouragement to acquire the book, and any who have not yet seen them will now have the opportunity to enjoy the quality of Mr. Menzies' wit and the delightfully humorous and colourful illustrations of Mr. Hendy. Mr. George Bernard Shaw has said that these Commentaries are "treasured by collectors and read by me with delight," and it is primarily for the discerning general reader that they have been brought together here. But the book will have considerable value besides as a permanent and notable example of that co-operation of highly accomplished experts in the service of commerce which is so marked a characteristic of the post-war world.
